The UK has the highest proportion of people with a mental illness living in the community. A report published on 30 September by the Royal College of Psychiatrists showed that there are about 11.6 million people in the UK with a mental health problem, and that half of people in prison have some kind of mental health problem. There are currently 17,000 people in prisons in England and Wales with mental health problems, and the numbers are increasing. The report is a follow-up to the 2014 independent review of services for people with a mental health problem in prisons, led by former health secretary Lord Warner, which said that: 'the evidence of the ineffectiveness of punitive regimes for improving mental health outcomes is overwhelming.' The Government was responding to this review's recommendation to increase investment in the community to offer people with a mental health problem the opportunity to live in their communities rather than in prison. The UK is the only country in the world with a criminal record for all people who have a mental health problem, regardless of whether they have committed any crime or not. The review called on the Government to end the criminal record for people with a mental health problem, and for the Government to pay for a mental health strategy for the rest of the UK to follow England's lead. Despite the review's recommendation, the Government continues to block access to service support for people with a mental health problem who are in prison, using Section 41 of the Mental Health Act, which bans the provision of mental health treatment to people in prison unless they pose a threat to themselves or others.
